"62 Days" is an award-winning documentary by Rebecca Haimowitz. It is a deeply moving and important film that sheds light on relatively unknown laws and the devastating consequences they have for women and their families.

This short documentary, composed primarily of intimate interviews with the Munoz family a year after their long ordeal, exposes the legal webs that restrict end of life decisions for pregnant women. The Muñoz family's personal journey is the jumping-off point for a timely examination of a growing trend of laws that seek to control a pregnant woman's body.
